THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1736.

ODE for his Majeſty's Birth-day, 1736, compoſed by COLLEY CIBBER, Eſq; Poet Laureat, and ſet to Muſick by Dr. GREEN.

A I R.

COME lovely Virgin, fair-ey'd Peace,
With all thy honeſt jovial Throng;
Loud-laughing Mirth, and ſmiling Eaſe,
Aſſiſt the Muſe and raiſe the Song.
Sing, Sing to GEORGE his Natal Day,
(Great GEORGE, who makes Mankind his Care)
While tripping Swains ſhall grace the Lay,
And dance upon the Grave of War.

RECITATIVO.

Down! down! the fell, the furious Monſter falls:
Diſbanded Rapine drops her Spoils around;
While, fearleſs now, the Voice of Labour calls,
To turn the bleeding Turf, and till the Ground.

AIR and CHORUS.

When Britain's late Arms
Were for Conqueſt renown'd,
Tho' her Triumphs had Charms,
Yet her Glory has found,
No Conqueſt more great,
Than to guard againſt War;
Nor the Pride to defeat
Like the Glory to Spare.

Ambition no more
Shall your Quiet annoy;
Nor the Peaſant deplore
What he hop'd to enjoy.
Your Commerce, your Arts,
Shall all flouriſh and ſing;
And the joy of your Hearts
Be the Joy of your King.

RECITATIVO.

Theſe Bleſſings, GEORGE, to thy great Influence giv'n,
Glorious proclaim Thee, Subſtitute of Heav'n.

A I R.

GEORGE, the Beam of Juſtice poiſing,
Marks Ambition's bounded Power;
When too high the Scale is riſing,
Britiſh Meaſures ſink it lower.
Kings, in frantick Pride contending
Native Bleſſings to deſtroy,
Learn, from GEORGE, their Ruptures ending,
Greater Bleſſings to enjoy.

RECITATIVO.

Diſtruſt and Envy now no more
Shall vainly blaſt the Views of Pow'r.

A I R.

But thankful for the Happy Day,
That gave the Godlike Hero Life,
Shall make, who now ſhall beſt obey,
The only Mark of Civil Strife.

CHORUS.

Till Fame has confeſt,
(Thro' the Glories of State)
In a People ſo bleſt,
No Monarch ſo great.

VER. 1. Come lovely Virgin, fair-ey'd Peace.] Several objections were raiſed againſt the epithet fair-ey'd: that there was no ſuch Engliſh word, or at leaſt that it was very uncommon; and that if it were allowable in a Poet to coin a new one, this was a very improper one, fair being applicable only to the complection, or to the hair, but not to the eyes. —— To this it was anſwer'd, that ſuppoſing the word to be intirely new, no one could diſpute Mr. CIBBER's authority in coining it. And as to its propriety, it might either denote in general fine or beautiful eyes; or it might more particularly ſignify either full-ey'd in oppoſition to flat-ey'd, or light or grey-ey'd, in contradiſtinction to black-ey'd. And as the Poet had introduced Peace as a lovely Virgin, he might aſſign her thoſe eyes which he thought the loveliest.

VER. 2. With all thy honeſt jovial Throng;
3. Loud-laughing Mirth, and ſmiling Eaſe,
4. Aſſiſt the Muſe, and raiſe the Song,

Moſt of our Members ſmiled, and many of them laughed loud at hearing theſe lines; imagining, that Mirth and Eaſe were here repreſented as all the honeſt jovial Throng, which attend upon Peace. But the perſon who read them, a friend of the LAUREAT's, obſerved, that there was a ſemicolon after Throng; and conſequently that Mirth and Eaſe were not put in appoſition with it, but were invoked by a direct application, as the two principal perſons, of which that Throng was compoſed.

VER. 5. Sing! Sing! to GEORGE his Natal Day.] The word Sing is mentioned only once, both in the DP. and the G. but the repetition is not only beautiful, but even the meaſure of the Verſe requires it. Beſides, it is plainly an imitation of three places in three former Odes. The firſt is in the Birth-day Ode 1731. Ver. 51.

Sing! Sing the Morn that gave him breath.

The ſecond in the Birth-day Ode 1732, Ver. 42, 43.

Sing, joyous Britons, ſing
The glorious Natal Day.

The third, in the New-year's Ode 1733, Ver. 10.

Sing, ſing to GEORGE's gentle ſway.

So that this imitation is an improved abridgment of four beautiful lines in one, and contains an exhortation to Peace, Mirth and Eaſe, &c. to ſing, not the natal day itſelf, nor on it, but to it; thereby as poetically intimating the perſonality of the Day, as of the ſingers. But perhaps it is only to be underſtood in the ſame manner with the cuſtomary exhortations of Pariſh Clerks in many places before the ſinging of Pſalms, Let us ſing to the praiſe and glory of &c.

VER. 6. Great GEORGE, who makes, &c.] The DP. and G. read that makes.

VER. 7. While tripping Swains ſhall grace the Lay.] The DP. and G. have Whilſt. —— One of our Members, an honeſt jovial companion himſelf, propoſed an emendation, by changing tripping into tippling, as being both more agreeable to the honeſt jovial Throng, mentioned in Ver. 2. and preventing the repetition of the idea of tripping, neceſſarily contained in the word dance in the next line. But to this it was anſwered, That as tripping, in one ſenſe of the word, was a conſequence of tippling, and might in the place under conſideration ſuggeſt the ſame idea; neither of the arguments advanced, even ſuppoſing them well grounded, did at all prove the neceſſity of any alteration. —— To the expreſſion in the latter part of the ſame Verſe, it was objected, that tho' a perſon who ſings and dances at the ſame time, may be ſay'd to grace his own Lay, yet no one who dances to another's, can be ſayed to grace that. But this objection was removed by a very natural ſuppoſition, that theſe tripping ſwains might be part of Peace's honeſt jovial Throng, and conſequently ſing as well as dance.

VER. 9. Down! down! the fell, the furious Monſter falls.
The G. gives it

Down the fell, the furious Monſter falls,

The DP. ſtill worſe,

Down the fell furious Monſter falls.

One of the Verſes being too ſhort by a ſyllable, and the other by a foot.—Tho' it was generally agreed, that this fell and furious Monſter was War; yet a difficulty thereupon aroſe, How this Monſter, which was dead and buried, as evidently appeared by the preceding Verſe, could in this be ſay'd to fall down. But it was ſolv'd in this manner: War was properly buried by the general Peace above twenty years ago; but he had ſince got out of his grave, and diſturbed the tranquillity of Europe, and was lately knock'd down again by the general pacification.

VER. 10. Diſbanded Rapine drops her Spoils around.] That Rapine here repreſented the plundering ſoldiery was not diſputed; but the truth of the aſſertion was: the foreign Princes lately ingaged in war having been ſo far from diſbanding any of their forces, that they have increaſed their number. But the aſſertion was juſtified by obſerving, thst in Poetry it was beautiful, by way of anticipation, to ſpeak of things as actually done, or doing, which were likely to be accompliſhed in a little time.

VER. 13. When Britain's late Arms
Were for Conqueſt renown'd,

Theſe two lines are printed in the DP. and G. in one. Some thought, that by late Arms was meant the late war in Queen ANNE's time, betweeu twenty and thirty years ago. But others, with more probability, were of opinion, that the Poet pointed at the victory at ſea in 1718. when in a time of peace, our Fleet having fought out that of Spain, and one of our ſhips having fired a civil ſalute, the ignorant and teſty Spaniard, miſtaking it for an attaque, returned a broad ſide, and thereby occaſioned the defeat and deſtruction of the greateſt part of the Spaniſh Fleet.

VER. 15. Tho' her Triumphs had Charms,
Yet her Glory has found,

The DP. and G. erroneouſly exhibit theſe two lines in this one.

Tho' glorious her Triumphs, her Glory ſtill found, leaving out one of the alternate rimes, and thereby ſpoiling this part of the AIR.

VER. 19. Nor the Pride to defeat
Like the Glory to ſpare.

The ſenſe of theſe and the three preceding lines is this: Britain's Glory has not found any Conqueſt greater than to guard againſt war, nor any Pride in defeating like the Glory to ſpare: i. e. her Glory has not found any Glory like this Glory. —— The whole AIR is falſely printed in Verſes of ſix feet in the DP. and G.

VER. 29. Theſe Bleſſings, GEORGE, to thy great influence giv'n,
Glorious proclaim thee, Subſtitute of Heav'n.

The G. falſely reads Thoſe inſtead of Theſe; and both that and the DP. leave out the comma after thee; which if rightly omitted, it would be better to tranſpoſe the foregoing words, and read Proclaim thee glorious, &c.

VER. 31. GEORGE, the Beam of Juſtice poiſing,
Marks Ambition's bounded Power;
When too high the Scale is riſing,
Britiſh Meaſures ſink it lower.

HOMER has repreſented JUPITER weighing the deſtinies of Heroes in a pair of golden-balances; and the ſcale which held the fate of HECTOR ſinking down towards hell. On the contrary, when MILTON repreſents God as weighing the fates of GABRIEL and SATAN, he deſcribes the ſcale of the latter as the lighteſt and mounting upward. But our LAUREAT, ſcorning ſervilely to copie after either of thoſe great men, here paints King GEORGE poiſing the Beam of Juſtice, which has but one ſcale; and when that is riſing too high, being lifted up by Ambition, his Majeſty, by throwing in the gravity of Britiſh Meaſures preſently ſinks it lower.

VER. 39. Diſtruſt and Envy now no more
Shall vainly blaſt the Views of Pow'r.

Three Objections were made to theſe lines: That blaſt was very improperly applied to Views, inſtead of blind; That the prophecy intimated ſomewhat paſt, which was impoſſible, viz. that the View of Power had been vainly blaſted; and likewiſe ſomewhat which might poſſibly happen hereafter, directly contrary to the intention of the Poet, viz. That theſe views might be effectually, tho' not vainly blaſted.—In anſwer to the firſt it was alledged, That here was an alluſion to Lightning, by which whoever is blinded may be ſay'd to be blaſted. To the two laſt, That by vainly blaſt the Poet meant no more, than only vainly endeavour to blaſt.

VER. 41. But thankful for the happy Day,
That gave the Godlike Heroe life,
Shall make, who now ſhall beſt obey,
The only Mark of Civil Strife.

The DP. and G. tranſpoſing three words in the 43d Verſe, read who beſt ſhall now obey. — By the Mark of Civil Strife is meant the Mark at which it aims. That Diſtruſt and Envy ſhould make this ſuperiority in obedience the only aim of Civil Diſcord, is ſuch an event, as when it happens muſt ſtrike every body with admiration. Nor could the Poet have adorned the latter end of his Ode with a more admirable prediction.

VER. 45. 'Till Fame has confeſt,
(Thro' the Glorys of State)
In a People ſo bleſt,
No Monarch ſo great.

Theſe four verſes make but two in the DP. and G. and in the 46th the latter ſubſtitutes Tho' for Thro', thereby rendering the ſenſe, which is otherwiſe ſufficiently intricate, altogether unintelligible. However it is plain, that the Poet has here imitated the Concluſion of his Birth day Ode in 1732.

'Till happier Subjects know,
Or foreign Realms can ſhow,
A Land ſo bleſs'd, a King ſo great.

VER. 37. Their Ruptures ending.] One of our Members thought it ſhould be read raptures, as more agreeable with the frantick pride of Kings in Ver. 35.

Malden, before he went out of Newgate, declar'd, that he had liv'd near two months at Canterbury before he was taken, and earn'd 18 s. a week honeſtly, and that having been bred a groom, he undertook the breaking of colts, and had two colts of a Baronet's near Canterbury in hand when apprehended; he ſaid he lived there without any notion of being taken, and that he was every day at Barham Downs during the races, and led the running horſes about between the heats; and that he was diſcovered by a horſe-courſer who formerly was a rider, and having rode againſt him once at Barnet, was run againſt a poſt and diſtanc'd by him, which made the fellow owe him a grudge; that the fellow had been to ſee him in Newgate, and ask'd his forgiveneſs; and that no woman was concerned in the diſcovering him; that he freely forgave him and every body, and made a full and ample diſcovery of the manner of his eſcapes, the many difficulties he underwent, with ſeveral curious particulars too long here to incert; for which we muſt refer our readers to the Dying Speech. His body, and Rine's, were taken and carried to Surgeon's Hall, and Morgan's delivered to his friends. At the gallows was read the clauſes of the Act, for the Surgeons to have ſo many bodies in a year, and the penalties inflicted on ſuch perſons as oppoſed them. LP. — The ſurgeons got the corps of Dan. CASE LXII.

Gentlemen,

COMPASSION to mankind inclines me to ſend you the following account of the ill effect of Mr. WARD's Medicines, which I hope you will publiſh as a caution to others.

About half a year ago I was low ſpirited, and had ſome pains in my ſide and back, but in general was hearty and ſtrong. A kind neighbour perſwaded me to take Mr. WARD's Pills, ſhe had none by her at that time, but had a card, for which ſhe had paid a guinea, and might have as many Pills by ſhewing her card as ſhe pleas'd; ſhe deſired me therefore to go and fetch ſome for her, this I did readily, but when I came to tender the card, he looked narrowly over me, and ſaid, Mrs. you look as if you were able to pay for them; but I anſwered: the gentlewoman who paid a guinea for this card, ſent me for ſome more: but that gentlewoman, ſaid he, can't take all ſhe ſends for herſelf, for this card has been ſent to me for Pills before now. However, I received two Pills and one Drop, which I joyfully carried home: but alaſs, they had like to have killed me. The next morning early I took one Pill; in about an hour and half's time it made me moſt grievous ſick, gave me a pain in my ſtomach and belly, and a general diſorder all over me: my good neighbour came and ſaw me in this condition, and adviſed me to take the other Pill to carry off the firſt, and theſe ill effects; ſhe gave me the ſecond, but in half an hour's time I was ſo miſerably ſick, that I thought I ſhould have died; the pain in my ſtomach and belly was ſo violent, and I fell into ſuch cold ſweats, that the ends of my fingers dropt with ſweat; and I was reduc'd to be ſo lifeleſs and cold, that my neighbours were call'd in to ſee me die; they neither vomited nor purg'd me, but I ſeemed to myſelf ready to burſt. With the kind aſſiſtance of my friends, and warm liquids, I came at length to myſelf; but can look on this violent Medicine to be no leſs than a poyſon.

Your humble ſervant,

At Mr. Taylor's near Aldgate. S. TAYLOR.

Richmond, Oct. 30.

Gentlemen,

PLEASE to inſert the following Oracle upon the appearance of The Antiquities of Surrey, which your female Readers will unriddle;

Your ſervant,

PHILO-COSMETICUS.

MERLIN, invok'd with pow'rful charms, gave ear,
And ſung the fortunes of a ſuppliant Pair:
Rub thou the ruſt from helmet dropt in war,
Whilſt ſhe maintains the conqueſts of the Fair.
Arm'd as ſhe ſtands to curb luxuriant tow'rs,
Gold is her portion, and neglect is yours.
PHOEBUS nor MARS with VENUS can contend:
Both Muſe and gauntlet muſt to ringlets bend.
Sages of old have left it on record,
That ſciſſars gain more vict'ries than the ſword.
Let SAMPSON witneſs this, whom Poltrons bind,
And his Herculean limbs condemn to grind;
Or that Ægyptian Princeſs clipt and curl'd,
Who coſt the brave MARK ANTHONY a world.
Happy the Writer, whom his Conſort's aid
Exalts t' adorn CORINNA's radiant head;
To whoſe diſſected ſheets, the lure of Beaus,
The Tête de Mouton form and figure owes!
Thus dead Antiquities once more revive;
And to both Young and Old new beauties give.

WE laſt week received a Letter from the London Punch-houſe, deſiring us to inſert a Copy of Verſes in praiſe of Punch, for which the Grand Punchman offered to pay us what we ſhould demand; and at the ſame time ordered his and Mr. WENMAN's Advertiſements to be inſerted alternately, 'till forbidden. Upon reading the Poem over very carefully, we found it to be a recommendation of Punch to the world, on the account of its excellence in promoting Drunkenneſs and Lewdneſs. As we had never recommended the practice of any vices in our Journal, we did not care to begin with an encomium on theſe two, tho' under the plauſible appearance of only puffing Punch, and on the proſpect of being well payed for it. Upon returning the Poem, our Printer received the following ſhort Epiſtle.

Mr. John Huggonſon,

Pleaſe to diſcontinue Mr. Wenman's Advertiſements, as alſo thoſe of

Your humble ſervant,

London Punch houſe,
Nov. 1, 1736. JA. ASHLEY.

They write from Edinburgh, that on friday the 22o of October, came on the election of a Peer to repreſent Scotland, in the room of the late Earl of Balcarras, when the right hon. John Earl of Broadalbin was unanimouſly choſen: it was obſerv'd to be the moſt numerous meeting of any that ever was known at a ſingle election; thirty-four Peers having voted in perſon, and twenty-one by proxies. After the election, his Lordſhip invited the whole nobility and ſeveral other perſons of diſtinction to a ſplendid entertainment at his lodgings in the palace of Holyroodhouſe. LP. Nov. 1.

FOREIGN NEWS.

FRIDAY, Oct. 29. If we can give any credit to our accounts from Paris, the young Dauphin is one of the moſt lively Princes of his years in the world. That Prince has been very buſy for ſeveral days, in his hours of recreation, planting acorns and other glands in the little wood that ſurrounds his garden. Tho' but 7 years old, he diſcovers an infinity of judgment and a ſurprizing taſte; from his own head, and without the leaſt hint from others, he has ordered ſeveral very proper decorations and embelliſhments, both for his garden and the wood about it. To be in action is his delight, and in idleneſs his averſion; and if any thing can have the aſcendant of his activity, it is his generoſity: he ſeems born to be a hero of the firſt claſs. DP.

His Majeſty ſpares no encouragement to make arts and ſciences flouriſh in the Univerſity which he founded at Gottingen in the Dutchy of Brunſwick; he lately granted ſeveral new privileges there, and augmented the ſalaries of the Profeſſors. DJ.

SATURDAY, Oct. 30. The departure of King Staniſlaus from Meudon is put off: ——— In ſhort, the publication of the peace is no longer mentioned in France, but as a proverb, when a man promiſes to do any thing in a certain time ſhort of doomſday. DA

MONDAY, Nov. 1. They write from Petersbourg, that Count Munich had made an exact eſtimate, in three ſheets of paper, of the whole loſs his army had ſuſtain'd in the expedition into Crimea on the one hand, and the advantages accruing to the Ruſſian Empire by the conqueſt of that province on the other; by which it fully appears, that in one glorious campaign, for the loſs of 10,000 men and a prodigious expence in money, her Czariſh Majeſty has obtained 364 caſt canon, and 17 mortars, which her troops, after levelling the lines at Perecop, had brought away in triumph. LP.

The immediate ceſſion of Lorrain is no longer talk'd of; and 'tis remark'd, that the Emperor, as it were to put the French out of hopes of his compliance, drank to the Archdutcheſs, on a late publick occaſion, by the ſtile of Dutcheſs of Lorrain. DA. —— The Emperor's army has actually paſs'd the Saave, in order to advance to Paſſarowitz, notwithſtanding the Turk declared he ſhould look upon that ſtep as an open rupture. DA. LP.

Prince Emanuel of Portugal, went from Valladolid to Bayone, and is on the road to Paris. DA.

TUESDAY, Nov. 2. —— Hanover, Oct. 30. The King of Great Britain applies himſelf with greater aſſiduity than ever to the examination of divers arrangements relating to the good and advantage of his Electoral dominions; and 'tis believed, that as it requires ſome pains, it will oblige his Majeſty to put off his return to England to a farther time. DJ.

WEDNESDAY, Nov. 3. Our advices by this poſt are in a ſtrain quite different from ſeveral preceding, and aſſure, with great confidence, the ſeveral particulars which follow. —— That matters are at length entirely accommodated between the Emperor and the King of Spain; that his Imperial Majeſty has conſented to to the alterations demanded by the latter, in the acts of renunciation; and that his Catholick Majeſty has thereupon ſent orders to the Duke of Montemar, to retire out of Tuſcany with the Spaniſh troops. — That the Perſian Ambaſſador at Conſtantinople has actually ſettled the baſis of a treaty of peace with the Grand Signior; and that the Czarina, inſtead of inſiſting upon the high demands formerly mention'd, has intimated that ſhe was ready to do the ſame, if the Turks would only yield up Aſoph. —— That the Grand Signior, far from being inclin'd to any conceſſions of that kind, has the ſame thoughts as the Ruſſians, with reſpect to the importance of Aſoph; and that the ceſſion of that place will therefore prove a point like to meet with great difficulties. —That the Imperial troops in Hungary, who were ſo briſk paſſing rivers, and advancing with haſty marches towards Turky, as if they waited only the laſt orders for making an eruption, and were ſure to carry all before them, are like to be faced by any army of 40,000 men, with Count Bonneval at their head; and that the grand council of war, held lately in the Emperor's preſence, and at which his Generals were call'd from all parts to aſſiſt, had ended in a reſolution to put the troops quietly in winter quarters. —— That the Pope, after all his former ſubmiſſions, now kept the courts of Spain and Naples at their diſtance, and peremptorily refus'd to grant Don Carlos the inveſtiture of his kingdoms of Naples and Sicily, till all the differences were all adjuſted, and he had ſatisfaction made him for the damage the Spaniſh troops did lately in the Camponia. DJ.

The Emperor, by the recommendation of the French King and Cardinal Fleury, has given Prince Alexander of Heſſe Rheinfels, the Dutcheſs of Bourbon's Brother, the late Prince Eugene's regiment of dragoons, of which Count Leyden is the commanding Colonel. They talk of a new alliance between the Courts of Vienna, Peterſburg, Poland, and the Republick of Venice, in caſe the peace between Ruſſia and the Turks is not included this year. LP.

The taking down King Staniſlaus's arms from the Hotel of Poland being found to have been done ſolely by the orders of Cardinal Albani, as Protector of that nation, and not by any authority, or even the cognizance of the Pope, that affair is made up; but the French court are determined to revenge itſelf on the Cardinal, and from hence demand, that he be excluded from the Pope's councils, for that his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty will not pay deference to any deciſion of the ſee of Rome, in which that Cardinal aſſiſts. DA.

Don Carlos being lately hunting in the new park he has made near Naples, met with a farm houſe that ſeemed to ſtand in his way, and without more ado ordered it to be levelled to the ground, which was executed the ſame moment, and to the great ſurprize of the people, a herd of 14000 ducats diſcovered in it, which the farmer had conceaſed in the wall for fear of having it taken from him. DH.

They write from Gibralter, that the admiral of Morocco had taken a Dutch ſhip with a rich lading, and ſixteen men, a woman and a child on board; but her name, from what port, or whither bound, is not mentioned; that having carried this prize into Saffia, he was put to ſea to cruze anew, and that the two other courſers were cruiſing likewiſe. DA.

By letters from Barbary, the mother of the reigning Emgeror, who it ſeems is a politick lady, laid a ſcheme for getting into her cuſtody the Baſhaw of Tetuan, who has fortified himſelf, and endeavours by all means to diſtreſs the government, in order to render his government independent: that in purſuance to her deſigns, ſhe made a pilgrimage to the tomb of ſome Mohometan ſaint near Tetuan, and being arrived there, ſent to invite the Baſhaw to make her a viſit, but he had got ſcent of the plot, and excuſed himſelf, but loaded her with rich preſents. DA.
